

RECEIVED

OCT 12 1976

OFFICE OF THE CLERK
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

IN THE SUPREME COURT
OF THE UNITED STATES

1976 TERM

No. [REDACTED]

76-1150

~~MONTANA OUTDOORSMEN ACTION GROUP,~~
LESTER BALDWIN, ~~RICHARD CARLSON,~~
~~JEROME S. HUGHES,~~ DAVID R. LEE,
and DONALD J. MORIS,

Appellants,

-vs-

FISH & GAME COMMISSION OF THE STATE
OF MONTANA; WESLEY WOODGERD, Director
of the Department of Fish & Game of the
State of Montana; ARTHUR HAGENSTON;
WILLIS B. JONES; JOSEPH J. KLABUNDE;
W. LESLIE PENGELLY; and ARNOLD RIEDER,
Commissioners of the Fish & Game Commission
of the State of Montana,

Appellees.

APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT
COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MONTANA

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION

JAMES H. GOETZ
Counsel for Appellants
522 West Main Street
P. O. Box 1322
Bozeman, Montana 59715

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
OPINION BELOW.....	2
JURISDICTION.....	2
STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED....	2
QUESTIONS PRESENTED.....	3
STATEMENT OF THE CASE.....	3
THE QUESTIONS PRESENTED ARE SUBSTANTIAL.....	6
A. THE ISSUES PRESENTED ARE SUBSTANTIAL BECAUSE IMPORTANT CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS RELATING TO COMITY AMONG THE STATES ARE INVOLVED.....	8
B. THE RULING OF THE DISTRICT COURT THAT THE DISCRIMINATION HAS A "REASONABLE" BASIS BECAUSE POLITICAL SUPPORT BY THE MONTANA CITIZENRY FOR THE GAME PROGRAM MIGHT ERODE IN THE ABSENCE OF SUCH DIS- CRIMINATION PRESENTS IMPORTANT FEDERAL QUESTIONS CONCERNING WHETHER SUCH JUSTI- FICATION HAS A PLACE IN OUR CONSTITU- TIONAL SYSTEM.....	13
MONTANA'S STATUTORY SCHEME RELATING TO NON- RESIDENT BIG GAME HUNTING IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL.	19
THIS CASE IS NOT MOOT.....	23
CONCLUSION.....	24
CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE.....	24

CITATIONS

PAGE

CASES

Austin v. New Hampshire U.S. _____, 43 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1975).....	6, 8, 9, 20
Brown v. Anderson 202 F. Supp. 96 (1962).....	17
Cole v. Housing Authority 435 F. 2d 807 (1st Cir., 1970).....	6, 16
Doe v. Bolton 410 U.S. 179 (1972).....	20
Edwards v. California 314 U.S. 160 (1941).....	16
Griffin v. County School Board 377 U.S. 218 (1964).....	16
Kleppe v. New Mexico U.S. _____, 44 U.S.L.W. 4878.....	22
League v. Colorado General Assembly 377 U.S. 713, 736 (1963).....	16
Memorial Hospital v. Maricopa County 415 U.S. 250 (1974).....	6, 15, 16
Missouri v. Holland 252 U.S. 416.....	22
Mullaney v. Anderson 342 U.S. 415 (1952).....	5, 13, 21
Roe v. Wade 410 U.S. 113, 125 (1973).....	24
Russo v. Reed 93 F. Supp. 554 (1950).....	18
Schakel v. State 513 P. 2d 412 (Wyo., 1973).....	22
Southern Pacific Terminal Co. v. I.C.C. 219 U.S. 498, 515 (1911).....	24
State v. Jack 539 P. 2d 726 (Mont., 1975).....	21
Steed v. Dogen 85 F. Supp. 956 (W.D. Tex., 1949).....	21

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

CASES

PAGE

Takahashi v. Fish and Game Commission
334 U.S. 410 (1948).....	21, 22
Toomer v. Witsell
334 U.S. 385 (1948).....	5, 13, 19, 21, 22
West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette
319 U.S. 624, 638.....	16

STATUTES

United States Constitution
Article IV, Section 2.....	2, 4, 9, 19
Article IV, Section 2, Clause 1.....	13
16 U.S.C. 669, et seq.....	7
28 U.S.C. 1253.....	2
28 U.S.C. 1343.....	2
28 U.S.C. 2201.....	2
28 U.S.C. 2202.....	2
28 U.S.C. 2281.....	2, 5
42 U.S.C. 1983.....	2
Revised Codes of Montana
Section 26-202.1 (1947).....	2, 3, 7, 11, 23

MISCELLANEOUS

Supreme Court Rules
13(2).....	1
15.....	1
33.....	25

IN THE SUPREME COURT
OF THE UNITED STATES

*****

1976 TERM

No. _____

*****

~~MONTANA OUTFITTERS ACTION GROUP,~~
LESTER BALDWIN, ~~RICHARD CARLSON,~~
~~GEROME J. HUGHES,~~ DAVID R. LEE,
and DONALD J. MORIS,

Appellants,

-vs-

FISH & GAME COMMISSION OF THE STATE
OF MONTANA; WESLEY WOODGERD, Director
of the Department of Fish & Game of the
State of Montana; ARTHUR HAGENSTON;
WILLIS A. JONES; JOSEPH J. KLABUNDE;
W. LESLIE PENGELLY; and ARNOLD RIEDER,
Commissioners of the Fish & Game Commission
of the State of Montana,

Appellees.

*****

APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT
COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MONTANA

*****

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION

The Appellants, pursuant to United States Supreme Court Rules 13(2) and 15, file this statement of the basis upon which it is contended that the Supreme Court of the United States has jurisdiction on a direct appeal to review the final order of the Statutory District Court and should exercise such jurisdiction in this case.

1                                    OPINION BELOW

2            The Statutory District Court for the District of 3 Montana issued its opinion in this case on August 11, 4 1976. The opinion is not yet reported and has been 5 attached hereto as a Joint Appendix.

6                                    JURISDICTION

7            This action was instituted on June 23, 1975, pur-
8 suant to Title 42 U.S.C. §1983, Title 28 U.S.C. §1343;
9 28 U.S.C. §2281; 28 U.S.C. §§2201, 2202; and Article IV,
10 Section 2 (Privileges and Immunities) and the Fourteenth
11 Amendment to the United States Constitution, challenging 12 the constitutionality of the license fee system of the 13 State of Montana for the hunting of big game (Section 26-14 202.1, R.C.M., 1947). The Statutory District Court, by 15 District Judges Russell E. Smith and William Jameson, 16 filed its opinion on August 11, 1976, denying Plaintiffs'
17 claims. Circuit Judge James Browning filed a dissenting
18 opinion.

19            The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review the 20 decree of the Statutory District Court by direct appeal 21 is conferred by Title 28 U.S.C. §1253.

22                                    STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

23            The constitutional provisions involved in this case
24 are: Article IV, Section 2, United States Constitution
25 and the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Consti-
26 tution. The statutory provisions involved are: Section
27 26-202.1, Revised Codes of Montana, 1975 version and 1976
28 [amended] version. The text of Section 26-202.1, R.C.M., 29 1975 and 1976 versions, are reprinted in the Joint Appen-
30 dix to this jurisdictional statement.

1                                    QUESTIONS PRESENTED

- 2            1. Whether the Montana statutory scheme relating 3 to big game license fees which imposes sub-
4 stantially higher license fees on non-resident
5 hunters and which requires that non-residents,
6 but not residents, purchase a "combination"
7 license for various species of game in order to 8 hunt big game in Montana, denies to non-resident
9 hunters their constitutional rights guaranteed
10 them under Article IV, Section 2 (Privileges
11 and Immunities) and the Fourteenth Amendment
12 (Equal Protection) of the United States Consti-13 tution.
- 14            2. Whether the Montana statutory scheme relating to 15 big game license fees which imposes substantial 16 burdens (financial and otherwise) on non-resident 17 hunters but not on resident hunters, which can-18 not be reasonably justified on any cost basis,
19 can nevertheless survive a constitutional
20 challenge on the basis that political support
21 of the local citizenry for the big game manage-22 ment program in Montana may evaporate in the 23 absence of discrimination against non-resident 24 hunters.

25                                    STATEMENT OF THE CASE

26            This action was filed on June 23, 1975. Plaintiffs-27 Appellants Carlson, Huseby, Lee and Moris are Minnesota
28 residents who regularly hunt for big game, particularly 29 elk, in the State of Montana. Appellant Lester Baldwin 30 is a licensed outfitter (hunting guide) in the State of Montana whose business is substantially dependant on non-resident hunters. The Montana Outfitters Action Group is an organization whose membership consists of licensed outfitters operating in Montana, business owners in Montana, Montana dude ranchers and non-residents who hunt in Montana.

Appellants challenge the constitutionality of the following two statutory schemes relating to big game hunting embodied in Section 26-202.1, R.C.M., 1947:

1. The license fee structure which grossly discriminates against the non-resident hunter.

2. The arbitrary imposition upon non-resident hunters, but not resident hunters, of the big game "combination" license for the right to hunt certain species of big game, particularly elk. In the 1975 hunting season, in order to hunt elk in Montana, the non-resident hunter was required to purchase a "combination" license ($151.00 fee) which entitled him to take one elk and two deer. The resident was not required to purchase a "combination" license, but instead could purchase a license solely for elk at a cost of $4.00. In the 1976 hunting season, in order to hunt elk in Montana, the non-resident was required to purchase a "combination" license ($225.00 fee) which entitled him to take one elk, one deer, and one black bear. The resident was not required to purchase a "combination" license in 1976, but instead could purchase a license solely for elk at a cost of $9.00.

Defendants-Appellees are the Fish and Game Commission of the State of Montana, the individual Fish and Game Commissioners of the State of Montana, and Wesley Woodgerd, Director of the Fish and Game Department of the State of Montana.

The challenge of Plaintiffs-Appellants is based on the privileges and immunities clause of Article IV, Section 2 of the United States Constitution and on the equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

Plaintiffs' Complaint sought a declaratory judgment that said statutory scheme was unconstitutional, an injunction against enforcement of the statute and damages for each non-resident Plaintiff who had purchased a big game license to the extent that the license fee for non-resident hunters exceeded the costs to the State of Montana "reasonably related to the additional costs of enforcement of the State Fish and Game laws and of contribution to conservation programs." (Complaint, p. 8).

Plaintiffs have taken the position throughout this law suit that the State of Montana could, consistent with the United States Constitution, assess a higher fee for non-resident big game hunting than for residents, but that such higher fee is constitutional only to the extent that it either compensates the State for revenues expended by the State for the added enforcement burden non-residents impose on Montana, if any; and/or, reasonably compensates the State for conservation expenditures made by the State for fish and game purposes from resident-paid taxes. See generally, Mullaney v. Anderson, 342 U.S. 415 (1952), and Toomer v. W. H. L., 334 U.S. 385 (1948).

A statutory three-Judge District Court was convened pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 2281.* An evidentiary hearing was held by stipulation before a single Judge and a transcript thereon prepared and submitted to the three-Judge Court.

The District Court rendered its decision on August 11, 1976, rejecting all of Plaintiffs' claims (Judge Browning, Circuit Judge, dissenting).

The majority opinion specifically agreed with Plaintiffs that the challenged license fee ratio "...cannot be justified on any basis of cost allocation." (Opinion, p. 4). Nevertheless, the majority opinion held that the privileges and immunities clause is inapplicable; that the challenged classifications, not touching upon a fundamental right, should be reviewed on the "rational relationship" standard; and that the State of Montana could find reasonable basis for the statutory discrimination in the possibility that the political motivation of the Montana

*This statute was repealed on August 12, 1976, P.L. 94-381, 94th Cong., S 537, but such repeal does not apply to any action commencing before that date.

1 citizenry to underwrite the elk management program might
2 be destroyed if the discrimination were eliminated.
3 (Opinion, pp. 8, 9).

4 Judge Browning, in dissent, stated that the majority
5 sustained the discrimination "...on a novel theory not 6 suggested by the state or supported by any authority."
7 (Opinion, p. 1, dissent). He relied on Memorial Hospital
8 v. Maricopa County, 415 U.S. 250 (1974), and Cole v.
9 Housing Authority, 435 F. 2d 807 (1st Cir., 1970) for the 10 proposition that "A state may not employ an invidious 11 discrimination to sustain the political viability of its 12 programs. 415 U.S. at 266." (Opinion, p. 3, dissent).

13 THE QUESTIONS PRESENTED ARE SUBSTANTIAL

14 Appellants submit that the actions, opinion and 15 judgment below present substantial questions warranting
16 the acceptance of jurisdiction. The challenge presented 17 by Plaintiffs involves the Montana statutory scheme which 18 discriminates arbitrarily against non-residents who desire 19 to hunt big game, particularly elk, in the State of 20 Montana. Since the challenged burden hinges on the fact 21 of non-citizenship, special questions relating to the 22 "maintenance of our constitutional federalism" are in-23 volved. See Austin v. New Hampshire, ____ U.S. ____, 43
24 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1975).

25 Montana presently assesses a fee to the non-resident 26 for the right to hunt elk which is approximately twenty-27 eight (28) times the fee charged the resident. (See, 28 Opinion, footnote 7, p. 4). Yet, approximately thirty 29 percent (30%) of all land in Montana is Federal land
30 (virtually all of which is accessible to hunters),<sup>1</sup> a

<sup>1</sup>Stipulation No. 25, Pre-Trial Order.

1 "significant portion" of elk habitat in Montana is on
2 Federal land,<sup>2</sup> and seventy-five percent (75%) of all elk
3 taken by hunters in Montana are taken on Federal lands.<sup>3</sup>
4 Furthermore, the financial contribution to Montana hunting
5 by all citizens of the United States is substantial 6 through the Pittman-Robertson Act, 16 U.S.C. 669, et seq.
7 Thus, while Montana is a member of a nation of States and 8 receives substantial support in various forms for its big 9 game hunting program from the Federal government (and all 10 of the citizens of the nation), it apparently feels free 11 to assess whatever burdens it pleases on non-residents.
12 Indeed, the State of Montana argued below that it could 13 exclude entirely non-residents from hunting in Montana if 14 it so desired.

15 The position taken by the State of Montana in enacting 16 Section 26-202.1, R.C.M., 1947, and in defending this 17 action indicate that the State is thoroughly insensitive
18 to the obligation of Federal citizenship. Unfortunately,
19 the majority opinion of the District Court has sanctioned
20 this position and has, in fact, left the State of Montana 21 free to increase the burden imposed on non-residents.

<sup>2</sup>Stipulation No. 28, Pre-Trial Order.

<sup>3</sup>Stipulation No. 26, Pre-Trial Order.

1 A. THE ISSUES PRESENTED ARE SUBSTANTIAL BECAUSE 2 IMPORTANT CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS RELATING TO 3 COMITY AMONG THE STATES ARE INVOLVED

4 Under the statutory scheme here challenged, the 5 State of Montana is arbitrarily limiting the number of 6 non-residents who may come into the State to hunt big game.
7 Appellants recognize that there may well be a shortage of 8 big game in Montana in relation to the demand to hunt.
9 Appellants recognize that any State has a legitimate
10 police power interest in managing its big game. Appellants
11 also recognize that non-resident hunters may be assessed 12 higher fees by the State of Montana to the extent that such 13 non-residents pose additional costs to the State for en-14 forcement and to the extent that residents pay taxes to 15 support the big game program which non-residents do not 16 bear.

17 Nevertheless, because Montana is part of our Federal 18 constitutional system, and because all national citizens
19 contribute significantly in diverse ways to the enhancement
20 of hunting in Montana, there are constitutional limits to 21 what the State of Montana can do to limit the number of non-22 resident hunters. The constitutional concern of the 23 United States Supreme Court relating to discrimination by 24 a State against non-residents was recently set forth in 25 Austin v. New Hampshire, ____ U.S. ____, 43 L. Ed. 2d 530
(1975):

26 In resolving constitutional challenges to 27 state tax measures this Court has made it 28 clear that "in taxation, even more than in 29 other fields, legislatures possess the 30 greatest freedom in classification." (Citing cases). Our review of tax classifications has generally been concomitantly narrow, therefore, to fit the broad discretion vested in the state legislatures. When a

1 tax measure is challenged as an undue burden
2 on an activity granted special constitutional
3 recognition, however, the appropriate degree
4 of inquiry is that necessary to protect the 5 competing constitutional value from erosion.
6 See Lehman v. Lake Shore Auto Parts Co.,
7 supra, 100 U.S. at 359.

8 This consideration applies equally to the pro-
9 tection of individual liberties, see Grosjean
10 v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233 (1936), and 11 to the maintenance of our constitutional feder-
12 alism. See Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co.
13 v. Calvert, 347 U.S. 157, 164 (1954). (Emphasis 14 added).

15 The Court further said:

16 Since nonresidents are not represented in the 17 taxing State's legislative halls, cf., Allied 18 Stores of Ohio, Inc. v. Bowers, 358 U.S. 522, 19 532-533 (1959) (BRENNAN, J., concurring),
20 judicial acquiescence in taxation schemes that 21 burden them particularly would remit them to 22 such redress as they could secure through their 23 own State; but "to prevent [retaliation] was one 24 of the chief ends sought to be accomplished by 25 the adoption of the Constitution." Travis v.
26 Yale & Towne Mfg. Co., 252 U.S. 60, 80 (1920).
27 Our prior cases, therefore, reflect an appropri-28 ately heightened concern for the integrity of 29 the standard of review substantially more 30 rigorous than that applied to state tax distinctions among, say, forms of business organizations or different trades and professions. (43 U.S.L.W.
4401, 4402). (Emphasis added).

Although the Montana big game license fee here under challenge is not technically a tax, the rationale of the Austin decision is nevertheless applicable. Just as in the Austin case, important questions relating to our system of constitutional federalism are involved. The Privileges and Immunities Clause of Article IV, Section 2, was established precisely because of the problem of discrimination by states against non-residents.

In the area of fish and wildlife, the problem is becoming more evident as the country becomes more populated and as recreational time becomes more available to the average person. A report by the Wildlife Management Institute (1971)<sup>4</sup> states:

Outdoor recreational uses are increasing dramatically, and there is greater tendency to restrict the nonresident as the competition for space and resource becomes more acute. Strangely enough, this reaction often is more apparent in the States having large expanses of public land, scenery, and wildlife. People who choose to reside in such States obviously relish freedom from crowding. They are possessive about abundant opportunities to hunt and fish, and they make no effort to disguise their dislike of nonresident sportsmen, particularly hunters. As a result, they tend to favor controlling the nonresident by imposing higher fees and quotas long before they will accept more controls over themselves. Politically, it is always easier to impose added costs and new restrictions on nonresidents because they have no voice or vote within a particular state. (pp. 12, 13). (Emphasis added).

The very value the Framers intended to protect through the privileges and immunities clause--comity among the States--is threatened by such discriminatory practices against the non-resident.

The majority opinion below did not respond to the issues presented relating to constitutional federalism. The opinion essentially ignored the Privileges and Immunities Clause. However, the most important problem with the opinion below is that it gives the State carte blanche to continue with its discrimination against non-residents and, indeed, increase it. The ultimate conclusion of the majority, if taken seriously by the States, could have disastrous consequences to our Federal system. The holding of the Court is stated as follows:

We conclude that where the opportunity to enjoy a recreational activity is created or supported by a state, where there is no nexus between the activity and any fundamental right, and where by its very nature the activity can be enjoyed by only a portion of those who would enjoy it, a state may prefer its residents over the residents of other states, or condition the enjoyment of the nonresident upon such terms as it sees fit. (Opinion, p. 9) (Emphasis added).

<sup>4</sup>In 1971, the International Association of Game and Fish Commissioners commissioned the Wildlife Management Institute to prepare this report on non-resident license fee discrimination. This report is Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 7.

The majority is saying that the State is free to do anything it wants regarding non-residents where no fundamental right is involved. This means Montana could exclude totally non-residents or exclude all non-residents except those who will pay dearly for the opportunity or exclude all but redheaded non-residents. The open-ended nature of the Court's opinion can only be read as sanctioning total freedom on the part of the State to favor residents over non-residents in any way whatsoever, no matter how arbitrary, no matter how attenuated the classification is from legitimate game management purposes. This result contains within it disastrous consequences to our Federal structure.

Montana's "combination" big game license is a good example of an arbitrary requirement imposed on non-residents which does not serve any legitimate fish and game management purposes, but which is sustainable under the lower Court's faulty reasoning. For the 1976 season, non-residents, in order to hunt elk, must purchase the "combination" license which includes one elk, one deer, and one black bear. Section 26-202.1, R.C.M., 1947. Residents can purchase a license solely for elk. Black bears hibernate approximately the middle of the hunting season so the non-resident who comes to Montana during the second half of the season has virtually no opportunity

1 to take advantage of the bear license. (Tr. 17-18, 296).
2 Furthermore, the demand by non-residents to hunt black
3 bear is minimal. (Tr. 27-28). Most important, however,
4 is the evidence which indicates that the combination
5 license works in part to foster waste of game. There was 6 testimony at trial indicating that some non-residents who 7 are hunting for elk only will come upon an animal of 8 another species and shoot it, not because he wants the 9 animal, but because he has been compelled to purchase a 10 license for it. (Tr. 143-144).

11 Thus, the "combination" license requirement for non-12 residents is an arbitrary imposition which serves no
13 legitimate fish and game management purposes in any direct 14 way. Indeed, the majority opinion concedes as much 15 (although the opinion failed to address specifically the 16 combination license issue). Nevertheless, the opinion
17 holds that, because the right is recreational and not 18 fundamental, and since there are more potential hunters 19 than game available, the State is free to "condition the 20 enjoyment of the nonresident upon such terms as it sees 21 fit." (Opinion, p. 9). This, in spite of the fact that 22 seventy-five percent (75%) of the elk taken by hunters
23 in Montana are taken on Federal lands.

24 Thus, the questions presented are substantial both 25 because sensitive issues of comity between the states are 26 involved and because the opinion of the District Court is 27 such an open-ended sanction to arbitrary discrimination by 28 a state against citizens of other states.
29
30

1 B. THE RULING OF THE DISTRICT COURT THAT THE DIS-
2 CRIMINATION HAS A "REASONABLE" BASIS BECAUSE 3 POLITICAL SUPPORT BY THE MONTANA CITIZENRY FOR THE 4 GAME PROGRAM MIGHT ERODE IN THE ABSENCE OF SUCH
5 DISCRIMINATION PRESENTS IMPORTANT FEDERAL QUESTIONS
6 CONCERNING WHETHER SUCH JUSTIFICATION HAS A PLACE
7 IN OUR CONSTITUTIONAL SYSTEM

8 The present suit was lodged by Plaintiffs challenging
9 the Montana big game license fee discrimination against 10 non-residents and challenging the arbitrary imposition of 11 the "combination" license upon non-residents, but not 12 residents. The primary basis of Plaintiffs' Complaint is 13 the privileges and immunities clause of Article IV,
14 Section 2, Clause 1, of the United States Constitution, 15 which provides:

16 The citizens of each state shall be entitled
17 to all privileges and immunities of citizens
18 of the several states.

19 It is well established that this clause applies to 20 state regulation of fish and game. Mullaney v. Anderson, 21 342 U.S. 415 (1952); Toomer v. Witsell, supra. In the 22 Mullaney case, the territorial legislature of Alaska
23 provided for the licensing of commercial fishermen in 24 territorial waters, imposing a $5.00 license fee on 25 resident fishermen and a $50.00 fee on non-residents.
26 The Supreme Court found the non-resident license fee in-27 valid under the privileges and immunities clause, Article
28 IV, Section 2, Clause 1. The Court cited with approval
29 the holding of Toomer v. Witsell, supra, that the state 30 may only "charge non-residents a differential which would merely compensate the state for any added enforcement burden they might impose or for any conservation expenditures from taxes which only residents pay." (At 417). (Emphasis added).

1 The State of Montana attempted to justify the license
2 fee differential in the present case by arguing that the 3 differential was based on additional enforcement and 4 conservation costs imposed by non-residents to the State
5 of Montana. The majority opinion of the District Court
6 specifically found that the ratio in the State of Montana
7 between the fees assessed non-resident hunters to those 8 assessed resident hunters "cannot be justified on any 9 basis of cost allocation, even with due regard to the pre-
10 sumption of constitutionality." (Opinion, p. 4.) (Emphasis 11 added). Nevertheless, the majority opinion found that the 12 discrimination against non-residents by the State of 13 Montana in their hunting fees is not unconstitutional
14 under the minimal scrutiny test because the Montana
15 Legislature might reasonably make a judgment that the 16 elimination of discrimination against non-resident hunters
17 "might destroy the political motivation to Montana citizens 18 to underwrite the elk management program in the absence of 19 which the species might disappear." Parenthetically, it 20 should be noted that there is little factual basis in the 21 record to support the assumption of the majority concerning 22 what it thought to be critical importance of political 23 support of the Montana citizenry. Only approximately two 24 percent (2%) of the budget of the Fish & Game Department
25 of the State of Montana comes from the general fund
26 (general tax fund) of the State of Montana.<sup>5</sup> The Montana
27 Department of Fish and Game is heavily dependent on license
28 fee income and particularly dependent on revenues derived 29 from non-resident hunters and fishermen (approximately 30

<sup>5</sup>See Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 1, Montana Executive Budget.

1 2/3rds of the Fish and Game Department's license revenue
2 comes from non-residents).<sup>6</sup> Thus, without referring to 3 the evidence, the majority opinion grossly over-estimates
4 the importance of the support of the people of Montana for 5 the fish and game management program in the state.

6 The most important issue, however, is the substantive
7 legitimacy of the attempt by the District Court to find a
8 conceivably reasonable justification for the discriminatory
9 policies against non-residents in the fact that political 10 support might dwindle if the discrimination were not 11 continued. This issue presents a substantial Federal 12 question which this Court should review. This issue was 13 framed by Judge Browning in his dissent as follows:

14 In more general terms, the principal (of 15 the majority) appears to be that the state
16 may burden access by nonresidents to a
17 finite local resource in order to increase
18 the share available to residents and thereby
19 maintain a political base within the state
20 for the support of state efforts to conserve
21 the resource. Put in another way, a state
22 may justify the constitutionality of a dis-23 criminatory statute by showing that political 24 support by the class of people to be benefited 25 by the discrimination is necessary in order to 26 continue the program that benefits them.
27 (Opinion, p. 2, 3, dissent).

28 This is a dangerous attitude for a Federal Court to 29 take in justification of a discrimination by a state 30 against non-residents. Virtually any discrimination by a state against non-residents, no matter how invidious or noxious, could be justified on similar basis. This Court has rejected the invocation of local political support as a constitutional justification for discrimination. In Memorial Hospital v. Maricopa County, Supra, the Supreme

<sup>6</sup>Transcript, p. 34.

1 Court stated "a state may not employ an invidious discrimi-
2 nation to sustain the political viability of its program."
3 (At 266).

4 The Supreme Court in the Maricopa County case cited
5 with approval Cole v. Housing Authority, supra, invalidating
6 a city's durational residency requirement for access to 7 low-income housing projects. In Cole, the city argued 8 that durational residential requirement was "often the key 9 to survival of [public] housing" because voters believe 10 such a restriction to be necessary to avoid benefiting 11 newcomers as against long-time residents. The Court of 12 Appeals rejected this reasoning, stating, "the objective
13 of achieving political support by discriminatory means...
14 is not one which the constitution recognizes." (435 F. 2d 15 813) See also, West Virginia Board of Education v.
16 Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 and Lucas v. Colorado General
17 Assembly, 377 U.S. 713, 736 (1963). See also Griffin v.
18 County School Board, 377 U.S. 218 (1964). (In Griffin,
19 the County School Board closed down its public schools
20 entirely rather than comply with the desegregation deci-
21 sions of the United States Supreme Court. It is arguable 22 that elimination of the discrimination in compliance with 23 the United States Constitution would have eroded, and in fact 24 did erode, public support of the school system in the 25 county. Nevertheless, the Court found unconstitutional
26 the attempt of the county to close down the public schools
27 holding that the mandate of the United States Constitution
28 could not be avoided in such manner.)

29 In Edwards v. California, 314 U.S. 160 (1941), the 30 Supreme Court faced an attempt by the State of California

1 by legislation to block indigents from coming into the 2 state. Although the statute was invalidated under the 3 Interstate Commerce Clause, the Court made the following
4 observation which is pertinent to the present case:

5 ...Moreover, the indigent non-residents who
6 are the real victims of the statute are deprived
7 of the opportunity to exert political pressure
8 upon the California legislature in order to ob-
9 tain a change in policy...

10 ...
11 ...The prohibition against transporting in-12 digent non-residents into one state is an 13 open invitation to retaliatory measures.

14 Similarly, in the present case, if the State of 15 Montana can justify its discrimination on such tenuous 16 grounds, the possibilities for retaliatory measures by 17 sister states becomes almost infinite.

18 In a case very closely on point, a District Court in 19 Brown v. Anderson, 202 F. Supp. 96 (1962), faced a challenge 20 to an Alaska statute which allowed the state commission to 21 close off certain waters to non-resident salmon fisherman 22 if it appeared that there would not be adequate salmon in 23 such waters to perpetuate the population. The state 24 argued that the provision was reasonable in that it would 25 possibly prevent the destitution of residents (should the 26 salmon fishery become depleted). Alaska argued such 27 residents would become "a burden upon the citizens of 28 Alaska and not on non-residents", (pp. 101-102). The 29 District Court rejected this argument stating:

30 There is no exception in the privileges and immunities clause providing for differentiation on the basis of the general welfare of citizens of any state. If such were the case it would be possible to couch a legislative act in such words as to regulate almost all types of endeavor on the sole basis of welfare. We cannot agree with defendants that there is any authority to avoid the effect of the privileges and immunities clause solely under the guise of avoiding economic

1 losses to residents. The act cannot be sus-
2 tained on the basis that this is a reasonable
3 basis for difference in application. (Emphasis
4 added).

5 Also in Russo v. Reed, 93 F. Supp. 554 (1950)
6 (striking down as a denial of privileges and immunities a 7 Maine statute which prohibited non-residents from commer-
8 cially fishing in the Maine coastal waters in the summer
9 months), the Court stated:

10 Application of this principal (privilege 11 and immunities clause) leaves no doubt in our 12 minds that the Maine statute under considera-
13 tion is invalid. It is not a conservation
14 measure in that it limits the size of fish
15 taken, the size of the catch, or the season
16 for fishing. Such affect as it may have upon 17 conserving the supply of fish arises only from 18 the fact that non-residents as a class are prohi-19 bited from fishing in the coastal waters of the 20 state during the summer season, the only time
21 when whiting can be taken in that area... (At 561)
22 (Emphasis added).

23 In contrast to the authority cited above, the 24 majority opinion cited none. Instead it baldly concluded 25 that is is not unreasonable for the Montana Legislature to 26 worry about erosion of local political support and to base 27 a discriminatory policy against non-residents upon such 28 concern. Since virtually any discriminatory policy, whether 29 against non-residents or other classes, could be justified
30 in a similar way, the ramifications of the District Court ruling are serious. The Federal questions presented are substantial and should be reviewed by the Court.

1 MONTANA'S STATUTORY SCHEME RELATING TO NON-RESIDENT
2 BIG GAME HUNTING IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

3 The Privileges and Immunities Clause of Article IV,
4 Section 2 of the United States Constitution applies to 5 issues of discrimination by a state against non-residents
6 in the administration of fish and game laws. In Toomer
7 v. Witsell, supra, the United States Supreme Court faced
8 a requirement of the State of South Carolina which required
9 non-residents of South Carolina to pay a license fee of 10 $2,500.00 for each shrimp boat which operated in South
11 Caroline's coastal waters, but required residents to pay 12 only a fee of $25.00. The Court held that this discrimina-
13 tion violates the Privileges and Immunities Clause, Article 14 IV, Section 2, of the United States Constitution. The 15 Court stated with regard to this clause:

16 The primary purpose of this clause, like the 17 clauses between which it is located--those re-
18 lating to full faith and credit and to inter-
19 state extradition of fugitives from justice--
20 was to help fuse into one Nation a collection
21 of independent sovereign States. It was de-22 signed to insure to a citizen of State A who 23 ventures into State B the same privileges which 24 the citizens of State B enjoy. For protection
25 of such equality the citizen of State A was not 26 restricted to the uncertain remedies afforded
27 by diplomatic processes and official retalia-28 tion.

29 "Indeed, without some provision of the 30 kind removing from the citizens of each state the disabilities of alienage in the other states, and giving them equality of privilege with citizens of those states, the Republic would have constituted little more than a league of States; it would not have constituted the Union which now exists."
Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 180 (1868).

PP. 395, 396 (Emphasis added)

See also Mullaney v. Anderson, supra.

As recently as the 1974 term, the United States
Supreme Court applied the Privileges and Immunities clause

1 to a question relating to an imposition of a tax burden
2 based on the fact of non-residency. Austin v. New Hamp-
3 shire, ____ U.S. ____, 43 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1975). In that 4 case, the Court faced a challenge to the New Hampshire
5 Commuters Income tax, the effect of which was that New 6 Hampshire "taxes only the incomes of non-residents
7 working in New Hampshire." (43 U.S.L.W. 4400). The Court
8 (Marshall, J.) found the law unconstitutional, stating:

9 The Privileges and Immunities Clause, by 10 making non-citizenship or nonresidency an 11 improper basis for locating a special burden, 12 implicates not only the individual's right to 13 nondiscriminatory treatment but also, perhaps 14 more so, the structural balance essential to 15 the concept of federalism. 43 U.S.L.W. 4401, 4402.
16 (Emphasis added).

17 In discussing the underlying purpose of the Privileges
18 and Immunities Clause, the Austin Court stated:

19 The origins of the clause do reveal, however,
20 the concerns of central import to the Framers.
21 During the preconstitutional period, the prac-22 tice of some States denying to outlanders the 23 treatment that its citizens demanded for them-
24 selves was widespread. 43 U.S.L.W. 4401.

25 The Court states further:

26 Thus, in the first and long the leading explica-
27 tion of the clause, Mr. Justice Washington,
28 sitting as Circuit Justice, deemed the funda-29 mental privileges and immunities protected by 30 the clause to be essentially coextensive with those calculated to achieve the purpose of forming a more perfect Union, including "an exemption from higher taxes or impositions than are paid by the other citizens of the state." Corfield v. Corywell, 6 F. Cas. 546, 552 (No. 3230) CCED Pa., 1825. 43 U.S.L.W.
4401.

See also the recent case, Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179
(1973) at 200, holding that the privileges and immunities clause, Article IV, Section 2, "protects persons who enter Georgia seeking the medical services that are available there."

1 Lower Court cases dealing specifically with fish and 2 game discrimination issues have followed the reasoning in 3 Toomer, supra, and Mullaney, supra. In Gospodonovich v.
4 Clements, 108 F. Sup. 234 (1953), the Court faced a challenge
5 to a Louisiana state statute which discriminated against 6 non-residents in the regulation of commercial fishing off
7 the Louisiana coast. The Court, holding the Louisiana
8 statute unconstitutional under the Privileges and Immunities
9 Clause, said:

10 It is clear that the distinction between the 11 two types of licenses required by the statutes,
12 for both commercial fishing boats and commer-
13 cial fisherman, is based solely upon citizen-
14 ship... (P. 236)

15 ...These are not conservation measures, they 16 are intended to exclude non-residents from pursuing 17 a common calling of citizens of states bordering
18 on the Gulf of Mexico... (P. 237)

19 See also, Steed v. Dogen, 85 F. Supp. 956 (W.D. Tex., 20 1949), holding unconstitutional Texas law which assessed 21 drastically lower license fees for shrimpers who are 22 Texas residents as opposed to non-residents; and 23 Edwards v. Leaver, 102 F. Supp. 698 (D. R.I., 1952),
24 striking down state statute limiting commercial fishing
25 licenses to residents violative of the privileges and 26 immunities clause. See also, Takahashi v. Fish and Game
27 Commission, 334 U.S. 410 (1948), involving the equal pro-28 tections clause of the Fourteenth Amendment).

29 The state, in arguing the case below, attempted to 30 distinguish these cases under the privileges and immunities clause on the grounds that the present case poses an issue of recreational hunting as opposed to commercial hunting.
This distinction is without merit. In State v. Jack, 539

1 P. 2d 726 (Mont., 1975), the Montana Supreme Court ruled
2 that Montana's law requiring non-resident hunters to employ
3 local guides while hunting in Montana violated the Federal
4 equal protection clause. Also, in Schakel v. State, 513
5 P. 2d 412 (Wyo., 1973), the Wyoming Supreme Court ruled 6 unconstitutional on equal protection grounds a similar 7 statute.

8 The State of Montana also argued below that the State
9 maintained "ownership" over the wild game in the State in 10 its sovereign capacity and that, therefore, a Federal 11 Court is without power to intervene in management deci-12 sions of the State relating to its fish and game. This 13 antiquated ownership doctrine was laid to rest in Missouri
14 v. Holland, 252 U.S. 416, Takahashi v. Fish and Game Comm-15 ission, and Toomer v. Witsell, supra. In Toomer, the 16 Court said:

17 The whole ownership theory, in fact is now
18 generally regarded as a fiction expressive 19 in legal shorthand of the importance to its 20 people that the state have powers to preserve
21 and regulate the exploitation of an important
22 resource. And there is no necessary conflict 23 between that vital policy consideration and the 24 constitutional command that the state exercise
25 that power, like its other powers, so as not 26 to discriminate without reason against citizens
27 of other states. (At. 402).

28 More recently, this Court faced a constitutional 29 challenge to the Wild Free-Roaming Horses and Burros Act, 30 16 U.S.C. (Sup. IV) Sections 1331-1340, Kleppe v. New Mexico, ____ U.S. ____, 44 U.S.L.W. 4878. There the Court said:

Appellees' contention that the Act violates traditional state power over wild animals stands on no different footing. Unquestion-ably, the states have broad trustee and police powers over wild animals within their jurisdictions.

1 Toomer v. Witsell, 334 U.S. 385, 402 (1948);
2 Lacoste v. Department of Conservation, 263 U.S.
3 545, 549 (1924); Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U.S.
4 519, 528 (1896). But as Geer v. Connecticut
5 cautions, those powers exist only "insofar as 6 their exercise may not be incompatible with, or 7 restrained by, the rights conveyed to the 8 federal government by the constitution." 161
9 U.S. at 528. No doubt it is true that as bet-10 ween a state and its inhabitants the state may 11 regulate the killing and sale of [wildlife]
12 but it does not follow that its authority is 13 exclusive of paramount powers. Missouri v.
14 Holland, 252 U.S. 416, 434 (1920). Thus, the 15 privileges and immunities clause, U.S.Const., 16 Art. IV, Sec. 2, Cl. 1, precludes a state from 17 imposing prohibitory license fees on nonresidents
18 shrimping in its waters. Toomer v. Witsell,
19 supra;... 44 U.S.L.W. 4883

20 Thus, it is well established that the "ownership" theory, 21 whatever its merits, cannot be invoked to defeat basic 22 constitutional limitations.

23 For the foregoing reasons, Appellants respectfully
24 submit that the lower Court erred in its holding that the 25 Montana license fee structure does not violate the Con-
26 stitution. Because the questions presented are substan-
27 tial, Appellants respectfully urge the Court to review 28 the case.

29 THIS CASE IS NOT MOOT

30 The present challenge is lodged against the discriminatory license fee structure for big game in Montana for the 1975 and 1976 seasons. (Section 26-202.1, R.C.M., 1947). By the time this appeal is reviewed, those seasons will have elapsed. It is therefore arguable that this case is moot. However, it should be noted that, in addition to injunctive relief, Plaintiffs requested damages to the extent that they paid unconstitutionally excessive license fees for those seasons. (See Complaint, p.
Therefore, an actual controversy still presently exists.

1 Furthermore, the present case presents a question
2 that is "capable of repetition, yet evading review."
3 Southern Pacific Terminal Co. v. I.C.C., 219 U.S. 498,
4 515 (1911); Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 125 (1973). The 5 non-resident "combination" big game license has been re-
6 quired in Montana for many years in one form or another.
7 The license fee structure which discriminate against the 8 non-resident has also been a routinely renewed provision
9 of Montana law for years even though the precise figures
10 have varied from year to year.

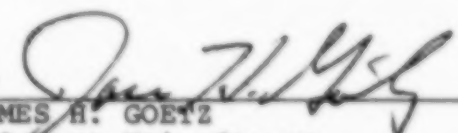

11 For these reasons, Appellants respectfully submit 12 that the Court should exercise review.

18 CONCLUSION

14 For the foregoing reasons it is submitted that the 15 present case presents issues substantial enough to merit
16 full review by the Court.

17 Dated this 8th day of October, 1976.

18 GOETZ & MADDEN

19 20 By
21 JAMES H. GOETZ
22 522 West Main Street
23 P. O. Box 1322
24 Bozeman, Montana 59715

28 CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

24 I, JAMES H. GOETZ, attorney for Appellants herein, 25 and a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the United 26 States, hereby certify that on the 8th day of October,
27 1976, I served copies of the foregoing Jurisdictional 28 Statement on the parties named hereunder, pursuant to 29
30

1 Rule 33, as follows:

2 Clayton R. Herron, Esq.
3 Attorney at Law
4 P. O. Box 783
5 Bozeman, Montana 59601

6 Sherman V. Lohn, Esq.
7 Attorney at Law
8 P. O. Box 1287
9 Missoula, Montana 59801

10 Chapman, Duff & Lenzine
11 Attorneys at Law
12 1709 New York Avenue, N.W.
13 Washington, D. C. 20006

14
15
16
17
18 19 20 21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28
29
30

JAMES H. GOETZ
522 West Main Street
P. O. Box 1322
Bozeman, Montana 59715

APPENDIX

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MONTANA
BUTTE DIVISION

FILED

1976

MONTANA OUTFITTERS ACTION GROUP,
LESTER BALDWIN, RICHARD CARLSON,
JEROME J. HUSEBY, DAVID R. LEE,
and DONALD J. MORIS,

Plaintiffs,

v.

FISH AND GAME COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF MONTANA; WESLEY WOODGERD,
Director of the Department of Fish and Game of the State of Montana;
ARTHUR HAGENSTON; WILLIS B. JONES;
JOSEPH J. KLABUNDE; W. LESLIE
FENCELL and ARNOLD RIEDER,
Commissioners of the Fish and Game Commission of the State of Montana,

Defendants.

JOHN E. PEDERSON, CLERK
By Dora Lou Sevener —
Deputy Clerk

CV 75-80-BU

OPINION

Before: BROWNING, Circuit Judge, and SMITH and JAMESON, District Judges

PER CURIAM:

This case is about elk and the rights of nonresidents to hunt them.<sup>1/</sup> The elk, once a plains animal, now lives in the mountains in central and western Montana. The elk is migratory in the sense that it moves from the summer range to

<sup>1/</sup> While there are disparities in the price of resident and nonresident fees for other fish and game licenses, only the combination license which permits the nonresident to hunt elk is drawn into controversy here.

the winter range and back, and when this sort of migration occurs near the borders of Montana, the elk drift to and from Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, and Canada. The summer range is in the mountains, and a significant part of it is federally owned.
The winter range is in the foothills and valleys, a significant part of which is in private ownership. About 75% of the elk killed are killed on federal lands. The elk is not and never will be hunted commercially. It is an animal much sought for its trophy value, and nonresident hunters are as a group more interested in the trophy than are the resident hunters as a group. In recent years there has been an increase in the number of hunters and a disproportionate increase in the number of nonresident hunters. In the years between 1960 and 1970 there was an increase of 536% in nonresident hunting as compared with an increase of 67% in resident hunting.<sup>2/</sup> The preservation of the elk depends upon conservation.

R.C.M. 1947 § 26-202.1(12) provides for a nonresident big game combination license and fixes the fee therefor.
A nonresident may not hunt elk without the combination license. The license fee for the 1976 hunting season will be $225.00, and for that fee the nonresident is permitted to take one elk, one deer, one black bear, upland birds, and fish. A

<sup>2/</sup> All of the State's objections to the introduction of evidence, which were reserved, are now overruled.

resident<sup>3/</sup> will be able to hunt elk in 1976 by the payment of $8.00 for an elk tag<sup>4/</sup> and $1.00 for a conservation license.<sup>5/</sup>

While a resident is not required to buy any combination of licenses, the cost to him of all of the privileges granted by the nonresident combination license would be $30.00.<sup>6/</sup> The ratio is, therefor, 7.5 to 1 in favor of the resident. The claim is that these licensing provisions are discriminatory and in violation of the privileges and immunities clause (art. IV, § 2) and the equal protection and due process clauses (amend. XIV) of the United States Constitution. Plaintiffs concede that the State may constitutionally charge nonresidents more for hunting and fishing privileges than residents because residents, through taxes other than hunting and fishing license fees, contribute to the wildlife management program, but urge that the degree of the disparity cannot be justified on a cost

<sup>3/</sup> R.C.M. 1947 § 26-202.3(2) provides:

"Any person who has been a resident of the state of Montana, as defined in section 83-303, for a period of six (6) months immediately prior to making application for said license shall be eligible to receive a resident hunting or fishing license."

R.C.M. 1947 § 83-303 provides:

"Every person has, in law, a residence. In determining the place of residence the following rules are to be observed:

"1. It is the place where one remains when not called elsewhere for labor or other special or temporary purpose, and to which he returns in seasons of repose . . . ."

<sup>4/</sup> R.C.M. 1947 § 26-202.1(4).

<sup>5/</sup> R.C.M. 1947 § 26-230.

<sup>6/</sup> R.C.M. 1947 § 26-202.1 (1), (2), and (4), and R.C.M. 1947 § 26-230.

basis. While no records are kept which precisely disclose the direct and indirect costs which properly may be apportioned between residents and nonresidents, the plaintiffs did offer the opinion evidence of an economist to the effect that a ratio of no more than 2.5 to 1 can be justified cost-wise. On a consideration of that evidence, the State's evidence opposing it, and with due regard to the presumption of constitutionality, we find that the ratio of 7.5 to 1 cannot be justified on any basis of cost allocation.<sup>7/</sup>

Defendants challenge the plaintiffs' standing. The plaintiffs Moris and Lee are nonresidents who have hunted for elk in Montana in the past and who want to hunt in Montana in the future. They are obviously adversely affected by an increase in nonresident license fees and have standing to maintain this action. The economic interests of Moris and Lee are affected, and that is sufficient. Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727 (1972). Since all issues are presented <sup>7/</sup> For a nonresident who wanted to hunt and hunted elk, and elk alone, the ratio is 28.2 to 1. Some part of the difference between the 28.2 to 1 and the 7.5 to 1 ratios may be justified by arguments made in support of the combination license, but, in view of our determination that the fee discrimination at a 7.5 to 1 ratio is not justified cost-wise, we approach the legal problems involved without resolving the arguments pro and con as to whether the discrimination caused by the combination license is justified.

by Moris and Lee, we do not pass upon the standing of the remaining plaintiffs.<sup>8/</sup>

Defendants suggest that there is no justiciable controversy because the law governing the 1976 hunting season will not be effective until July 1, 1976; the 1975 hunting season is over, and the law governing it cannot affect the plaintiffs.<sup>9/</sup> The problems here raised are those which are "'capable of repetition, yet evading review.'" Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 125 (1973). Had plaintiffs waited until July 1, 1976, to commence this action, it is unlikely that a resolution at this court level would be obtained until the 1976 hunting season was over. Absent a repeal of the challenged law, unlikely since the Montana legislature will not meet until January 1977, the plaintiffs will be affected by the present law, and there is now a controversy. We hold the controversy to be justiciable.

The State argues with some support in the authorities that the State owns the animals in their wild state in trust

<sup>8/</sup> The plaintiffs are four nonresident hunters, one licensed outfitter, and the Montana Outfitters Action Group, composed of seven licensed outfitters and seven dude ranchers and nonresident hunters. Amicus curiae briefs supporting the validity of the statute were filed by the Montana Outfitters and Guides Association, representing 123 outfitters, and by the International Association of Game, Fish and Conservation Commissioners, representing the wildlife agencies of all 50 states, Canada, Puerto Rico, and Mexico.

<sup>9/</sup> While we do not consider the law governing the 1975 hunting season (R.C.M. 1947 § 26-202.1) as it existed prior to the 1975 amendments (Laws of Montana 1975, ch. 91, § 1, ch. 417, § 1, ch. 546, § 1) we do note that the arguments now addressed to R.C.M. 1947 § 26-202.1 as it now exists are equally applicable, except perhaps in degree, to the prior law.

for the beneficial use of the citizens of the State, and that the State may do what it will with its own property.<sup>10/</sup> The plaintiffs contend with some support in the authorities that "[t]he whole ownership theory, in fact, is now generally regarded as but a fiction expressive in legal shorthand of the importance to its people that a State have power to preserve and regulate the exploitation of an important resource."<sup>11/</sup> We do not here choose between the theories advanced. The State under either theory has the power to manage and conserve the elk, and to that end to make such laws and regulations as are necessary to protect and preserve it.

Whether, in that management, a discrimination between residents and nonresidents is permissible requires an examination of the claimed right, the State purpose involved, and the justifications for the discrimination.

We turn to the nature of the right asserted by the plaintiffs in this case. Not everyone may hunt elk. There are too many people and too few elk. If the elk is to survive as a species, the game herds must be managed, and a vital part of the management is the limitation of the annual kill. That limitation may be accomplished in many ways, but all of them involve in some degree a limitation upon hunter days.<sup>12/</sup> The hunter days may be controlled by pricing the license, by conducting lotteries, by limiting the length of the seasons, and by restricting the area of the hunt. Any controlling device, by reason of its effect upon the life circumstances of a potential hunter, may deprive that hunter of any possibility of hunting elk.

<sup>10/</sup> The cases of Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U.S. 519 (1896); McCready v. Virginia, 94 U.S. 391 (1876); In re Eberle, 98 F. 295 (N.D.Ill. 1899), and some language in Foster-Fountain Packing Co. v. Haydel, 273 U.S. 1 (1928), lend support to this view. Because of the involvement of elk with the lands of the sovereign United States, the ownership analysis is not as readily applicable to elk as it might be to the Chinese pheasant.

<sup>11/</sup> The quotation is from Toomer v. Witsell, 334 U.S. 385, 402 (1948). In Missouri v. Holland, 252 U.S. 416, 434 (1920), Mr. Justice Holmes said, "To put the claim of the State upon title is to lean upon a slender reed." This language was quoted with approval in Takahashi v. Fish and Game Comm'n, 334 U.S. 410 (1948), and in Toomer v. Witsell, supra. All of the cases cited in this footnote were concerned with migrating fish and birds. The movement of the elk is more a drifting than a true migration.

Whatever word may be used to describe plaintiffs' asserted rights -- right, privilege, chance -- the asserted right is recreational in character,<sup>13/</sup> and except for a few residents who live in exactly the right place, is expensive recreation. Critically examined, the right asserted here is, therefore, no more than a chance to engage temporarily in a recreational activity in a sister state, and even the chance is dependent upon the willingness of the people of the sister

<sup>12/</sup> Each day that one hunter is in the field is a hunter day.

<sup>13/</sup> We believe that this is sufficient to distinguish this case from Takahashi v. Fish and Game Comm'n, supra; Toomer v. Witsell, supra; and Mullaney v. Anderson, 342 U.S. 415 (1952), all of which were concerned with the fundamental right to pursue a calling or business. In American Commuters Ass'n, Inc. v. Levitt, 279 F.Supp. 40 (S.D.N.Y. 1967), aff'd, 405 F.2d 1148 (2d Cir. 1969), the district court expressly distinguished between noncommercial fishing licenses and "commercial fishing rights involving interstate commerce." 279 F.Supp. at 48.

State to manage the subject matter of the recreation -- the elk. The asserted right is not fundamental<sup>14/</sup> and is not protected as a privilege and immunity by art. IV, § 2 of the United States Constitution. United States v. Wheeler, 254 U.S. 281 (1920); Canadian Northern Ry. v. Eggen, 252 U.S. 553 (1920); and Blake v. McClung, 172 U.S. 239 (1898).

We cannot ignore the nature of the right involved in treating the equal protection problem. If the needs for education at the primary level<sup>15/</sup> and at the college level<sup>16/</sup> do not create the fundamental sort of rights which have constitutional protection under the equal protection clause, then certainly the asserted right in this case does not have a constitutional basis and is not fundamental for equal protection purposes. There is simply no nexus between the right to hunt for sport and the right to speak, the right to vote, the right to travel, the right to pursue a calling. We are not, therefore, required to scrutinize the discrimination strictly but only to determine whether the system bears some rational relationship to legitimate State purposes.<sup>17/</sup>

The State purpose is to restrict the number of hunter days. Any regulatory system which imposes a license fee in some sense discriminates against those who can't afford to pay it. As the

<sup>14/</sup> See Black v. McClung, infra, at 248.

<sup>15/</sup> San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1 (1973).

<sup>16/</sup> Sturgis v. Washington, 368 F.Supp. 38 (W.D.Wash. 1973), aff'd, 414 U.S. 1057 (1973).

<sup>17/</sup> San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, supra; Hughes v. Alexandria Scrap Corp., ____ U.S. ____, 44 U.S.L.W. 4959.

fee increases, the discrimination increases. A regulatory scheme based upon a pure lottery in which a limited number of hunters were chosen would be discrimination-free, but a legislature might with some rationality<sup>18/</sup> conclude that a pure lottery open to all potential elk hunters in the United States might destroy the political motivation to Montana citizens to underwrite the elk management program in the absence of which the species would disappear.<sup>19/</sup>

We conclude that where the opportunity to enjoy a recreational activity is created or supported by a state, where there is no nexus between the activity and any fundamental right, and where by its very nature the activity can be enjoyed by only a portion of those who would enjoy it, a state may prefer its residents over the residents of other states, or condition the enjoyment of the nonresident upon such terms as it sees fit.<sup>20/</sup>

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that judgment be entered denying plaintiffs all relief.

DATED this 11th day of August 1976.

<sup>18/</sup> If the conclusion is rational, the presumption of constitutionality would require us to consider it.

<sup>19/</sup> Were a Montana resident's chances to hunt calculated purely on a population basis, Montana residents would get .34% of the elk licenses issued. On the basis of all elk licenses issued in 1973 (107,675), and the population in 1970 (Montana: 694,409; United States: 203,235,298), Montana residents would have received 366 of them (694,409 divided by 203,235,298, multiplied by 107,675). This figure is unrealistic because in any sort of a drawing allocating licenses, the proportion of applications from Montana to the population of Montana would exceed the proportion of applications from other states to the populations of those states. Montana residents can hunt more cheaply, and probably, because of their proximity to it, are more attracted by hunting. Even so, a legislature looking at the facts might conclude that some relatively small percentage of Montana hunters would be licensed if nonresidents and Montana residents were treated equally.

<sup>20/</sup> The results reached in the cases of Geer v. Connecticut, supra, n. 10; McCready v. Virginia, supra, n. 10; In re Eberle, supra, n. 10; and State v. Kemp, 73 S.D. 458, 44 N.W. 2d 214 (1950), appeal dismissed for want of a substantial federal question, 340 U.S. 923 (1951), are in accord with the result reached here.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Memorandum

TO : CLERK OF COURT - Butte
COPIES: JUDGES BROWNING and JAMESON
FROM : JUDGE SMITH

DATE: August 11, 1976

SUBJECT: Montana Outfitters v. Fish and Game Comm'n - CV 75-80-BU

I certify that Judge Jameson concurs with me in the attached per curiam. Please file it with Judge Browning's dissent attached.

Russell E. Smith
United States District Judge

Buy U.S. Savings Bonds Regularly on the Payroll Savings Plan

MONTANA OUTFITTERS ACTION GROUP
v. FISH AND GAME COMMISSION - No. 75-80-BU

BROWNING, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

The majority recognizes that the "ownership theory" espoused in early Supreme Court opinions is denigrated in more recent pronouncements. See Toomer v. Witsell, 334 U.S. 385, 402 (1948). Also in disrepute is the "special public interest" theory occasionally advanced to justify state discrimination in favor of its own citizens in matters of "privilege" as distinguished from "right." See Sugarman v. Dougall, 413 U.S. 634, 643-45 (1973); Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365, 372-74 (1970). All that remains is the traditional Equal Protection issue: Does the higher license fee charged nonresidents for hunting elk in the state serve a legitimate state purpose?

The contention most strongly pressed by the state is that the difference in license fee serves the legitimate purpose of imposing upon nonresidents a fair share of the cost of maintaining the elk herd. As the majority finds, however, "the ratio of 7.5 to 1 [or 28.2 to 1] cannot be justified on any basis of cost allocation." The majority does not discuss the other purposes advanced by the state to support the discrimination -- implying (and I agree) that there is no reasonable relationship between the discriminatory license fee and any of the other purposes advanced by the state. Each such justification is shown by the record to be either logically or factually unsupportable.

The majority nonetheless sustains the discrimination

-/-

on a novel theory not suggested by the state or supported by any authority.*

The ultimate state interest relied upon by the majority is the unquestionably legitimate and important one of conservation. The asserted relationship between the discriminatory license fee and conservation is not direct. The state employs discrimination, the majority suggests, to further conservation in an indirect and, in my opinion, impermissible way.

The majority holds the discrimination against nonresidents to be justified because the state might rationally conclude that if nonresidents were not discriminated against and thereby discouraged from participating in the elk hunt, the number of residents who could participate would be so small that the residents would be unwilling to maintain a vigorous conservation program. In short, an otherwise invidious discrimination against nonresidents is justified because the state may rationally consider the discrimination necessary to induce residents to support the state program required to conserve the herd.

In more general terms, the principle appears to be that the state may burden access by nonresidents to a finite local resource in order to increase the share available to residents and thereby maintain a political base within the state for the support of state efforts to conserve the resource. Put in another way, a state may justify the constitutionality of a discriminatory statute by showing that political support by the class of people to be benefited by the discrimination is necessary in order to continue the program that benefits them.

*The majority states (note 20) that the result reached in this case is in accord with the results reached in Greer v. Connecticut, 161 U.S. 519 (1896); McCready v. Virginia, 94 U.S. 396 (1876); In re Eberle, 98 Fed. 295 (N.D. Ill. 1899); and State v. Kemp, 73 S.D. 458, 44 N.W.2d 214 (1950), appeal dismissed for want of a substantial federal question 340 U.S. 923 (1951). As the majority notes (note 10), the first three cases rest on the "ownership theory," rejected in subsequent decisions, and, in any event, not readily applicable to elk, 75% of which are killed on federal lands. Dismissal by the Supreme Court of the appeal in State v. Kemp did not involve a ruling that the discrimination was constitutional. The statement filed in the Supreme Court in opposition to jurisdiction pointed out that violations of state statutes not claimed to be unconstitutional had occurred that were sufficient to sustain the conviction.

I do not believe discrimination for such a purpose is permitted by the Equal Protection Clause.

Memorial Hospital v. Maricopa County, 415 U.S. 250 (1974), involved a constitutional challenge to an Arizona statute requiring a year's residence as a condition to an indigent receiving non-emergency medical care at county expense. The state argued that "the requirement is necessary for public support" of modern and effective public medical facilities because the voters believed the requirement protected them from an influx of low-income families such facilities would otherwise attract. The Supreme Court rejected the argument, stating, "A State may not employ an invidious discrimination to sustain the political viability of its programs." 415 U.S. at 266.

The Supreme Court cited with approval Cole v. Housing Authority, 435 F.2d 807, 812-13 (1st Cir. 1970), invalidating a city's durational residency requirement for access to low-income housing projects. In Cole, the city argued that a durational residential requirement was "often the key to survival of [public] housing" because voters believed such a restriction to be necessary to avoid benefiting newcomers as against longtime residents. The

1 Court of Appeals rejected this reasoning, stating, "The 2 objective of achieving political support by discriminatory
3 means . . . is not one which the constitution recognizes."
4 435 F.2d at 813.

5 Memorial Hospital and Cole involved infringement
6 of fundamental rights that could be justified only by a
7 compelling state interest. But this does not make them
8 inapplicable. These cases rejected justification of 9 discrimination on political grounds because justification
10 on such a basis is inherently inappropriate, not because 11 the right infringed was fundamental.

12 A holding that discrimination by the state may be 13 justified by showing that the state could rationally believe
14 such discrimination was necessary to secure political support 15 for a program in the public interest, would lead inevitably,
16 if not directly, to the conclusion that invidious discrimina-
17 tion can be justified by popular disapproval of equal treat-18 ment. As the court said in Cole, such a rule "would 19 rationalize discriminatory classifications which are 20 constitutionally impermissible." 435 F.2d at 812. Address-21 ing essentially the same point in Memorial Hospital, the 22 Supreme Court said: "[p]erhaps Congress could induce 23 wider state participation in school construction if it 24 authorized the use of joint funds for the building of 25 segregated schools," but that purpose would not sustain 26 such a scheme." 415 U.S. at 267, quoting Shapiro v. Thompson, 27 394 U.S. 618, 641 (1969).

28 The majority's rationale is at odds with the 29 principle that constitutional rights are not subject to 30 abrogation by majority will. As the Court said in West
31 Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638
32

1 (1942): "The very purpose of the Bill of Rights was to with-
2 draw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political
3 controversies, to place them beyond the reach of majorities
4 and officials and to establish them as legal principles
5 to be applied by the courts." See also Lucas v. Colorado
6 General Assembly, 377 U.S. 713, 736 (1963).

7 The rule applied by the majority is impossible to 8 limit. It would immunize even the most arbitrary discrimina-
9 tion from constitutional attack whenever it could be contended
10 reasonably that the discrimination was necessary to obtain 11 political support for the state activity.

12 Access to outdoor recreation is increasingly 13 important to our society. It is significant, for example,
14 that the number of visitors to national and state parks
15 doubled in the decade 1960-1970. U.S. Department of Commerce, 16 Statistical History of the United States 1970. In fact if 17 recreational resources constitute a vital national 18 asset, the sentiment that state residents have a preferred 19 claim to such resources within the state is unworthy of 20 protection "under a Constitution which was written partly for 21 the purpose of eradicating such provincialism." Cole v.
22 Housing Authority, supra, 435 F.2d at 813.

23 I would hold Montana's discriminatory license fee
24 unconstitutional.
25
26
27
28
29
30
31
32

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT OCT 8 1976

FOR THE DISTRICT OF MONTANA JOHN E. PEDERSON, CLERK

BUTTE DIVISION

By Sharon F. Kelly
Deputy Clerk

*****

MONTANA OUTFITTERS ACTION GROUP, )
LESTER BALDWIN, RICHARD CARLSON, ) No. 75-80-BU JEROME J. HUSEBY, DAVID R. LEE, )
and DONALD J. MORIS, )

Plaintiffs, )

-vs- )

FISH & GAME COMMISSION OF THE STATE )
OF MONTANA; WESLEY WOODGERD, Director )
of the Department of Fish & Game of the )
State of Montana; ARTHUR HAGENSTON; )
WILLIS B. JONES; JOSEPH J. KLABUNDE; )
W. LESLIE PENGELLY; and ARNOLD RIEDER, )
Commissioners of the Fish & Game Commis- ) sion of the State of Montana, )

Defendants. )

NOTICE OF APPEAL
TO THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

I. Notice is hereby given that Montana Outfitters Action Group, Lester Baldwin, Richard Carlson, Jerome J. Huseby, David R. Lee, and Donald J. Moris, Plaintiffs above-named, hereby appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the final judgment of the District Court entered in this action on August 11, 1976.

This appeal is taken pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1253.

II. The Clerk will please prepare a transcript of the record in this cause, for transmission to the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, and include in said transcript the following:

1. Plaintiffs' Complaint
2. Defendants' Answer
3. Pre-Trial Order
4. Volumes I, II and III of the transcript of the Evidentiary Hearing
5. Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 5

1 6. Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 6

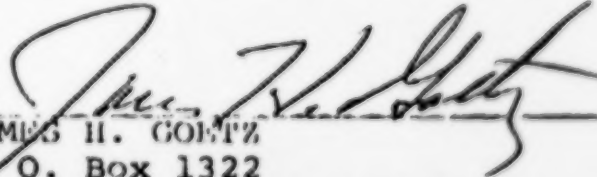

2 7. Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 7

3 III. The following questions are presented by this appeal:

- 4 1. Whether the Montana statutory scheme relating to big 5 game license fees which imposes substantially higher 6 license fees on non-resident hunters and which requires 7 that non-resident hunters, but not resident hunters,
8 purchase a "combination" license for various big game
9 in Montana, denies to non-resident hunters their con-
10 stitutional rights guaranteed them under Article IV,
11 Section 2 (Privileges and Immunities) and the Fourteenth
12 Amendment (Equal Protection) of the United States
13 Constitution.
- 14 2. Whether the Montana statutory scheme relating to big game 15 license fees which imposes substantial burdens (finan-16 cial and otherwise) on non-resident hunters but not on 17 resident hunters, which ~~cannot be reasonably~~ justified on any cost basis, can 18 nevertheless survive a constitutional challenge on the 19 basis that political support of the local citizenry 20 for the big game management program in Montana may evaporate in the absence of discrimination against non-resident hunters.

Dated this 7th day of October, 1976.

GOETZ & MADDEN

17 BY
18 JAMES H. GOETZ
19 P. O. Box 1322
20 Bozeman, Montana 59715
Attorney for Plaintiffs

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that a true and correct copy of the above and foregoing instrument was served upon the following counsel by depositing same in the United States mail in postage prepaid envelopes addressed as follows:

Clayton R. Herron
Attorney at Law
P. O. Box 783
Helena, Montana 59601

Chapman, Duff & Lenzine
Attorneys at Law
1709 New York Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

Sherman Lohn
Attorney at Law
199 West Pine
P. O. Box 1287
Missoula, Montana 59801

Dated this 7th day of October, 1976.

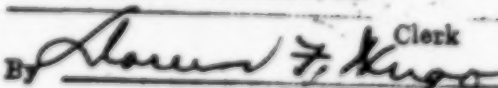

United States of America }
District of Montana } SS

JAMES H. GOETZ

I, the undersigned, Clerk of the United States District Court for the District of Montana, do hereby certify that the annexed and foregoing is a true and full copy of an original document on file in my office as such Clerk.

Witness my hand and Seal of said Court this 14th day of October 1976 -2-

JOHN E. PEDERSON

By  Clerk
Deputy Clerk,

BEST COPY AVAILABLE